UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
WESTERN DISTRICT OF WASHINGTON
AT SEATTLE

JOSEPH JEROME WILBUR, a Washington resident; JEREMIAH RAY MOON, a Washington resident; and ANGELA MARIE MONTAGUE, a Washington resident, individually and on behalf of all others similarly situated, Plaintiffs, v. CITY OF MOUNT VERNON, a Washington municipal corporation; and CITY OF BURLINGTON, a Washington municipal corporation, Defendants.	No. 2:11-cv-01100-RSL DEFENDANTS' MOTION FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT [JEREMIAH RAY MOON] NOTED FOR: OCTOBER 21, 2011

I. INTRODUCTION

Plaintiff, Jeremiah Moon, is a criminal defendant alleging that the public defense system for the City of Burlington has "systemically deprived him of his constitutional right to assistance of counsel." Complaint ¶ 6. The thrust of his Complaint is that the attorneys awarded the public defender contract, Richard Sybrandy and Morgan Witt, are overworked and incompetent. Complaint ¶ 6. According to Moon, among other things, these two attorneys "do not return calls" and "fail to stand with indigent defendants during hearings." Complaint ¶ 52. He is seeking injunctive and declaratory relief against the Cities of Burlington and Mount Vernon ("the Cities").[1]

[1] Mr. Moon is one of three putative class representatives pursuing allegations against Mount Vernon and Burlington. Messrs. Sybrandy and Witt perform public defender services for both cities.

The "extraordinary relief" sought is unwarranted. To date, no court has ever "constitutionalized" the type of grievances raised by plaintiff—and this Court should not be the first. Summary judgment should be granted for the following reasons:

First, injunctive relief requires "no adequate remedy at law." This could not be further from the truth here. To the extent that attorneys Sybrandy or Witt are ineffective, or even unlikeable, the plaintiff can simply request a substitution of counsel—a remedy that he successfully exercised only a few months ago. When a request for substituted counsel is verbalized by a criminal defendant, it is reversible error if the trial court refuses to conduct "such necessary inquiry as might have eased [the defendant]'s dissatisfaction, distrust, and concern." Brown v. Craven, 424 F.2d 1166, 1170 (9th Cir. 1970). And failing that, Sixth Amendment deprivations are regularly addressed through evidentiary hearings, and on appeal. Given these ongoing, mandatory remedies already built into the system, this is precisely the wrong case for prospective relief.

Second, plaintiffs lack standing to seek the relief contemplated in their lawsuit. This requires, under Article III, "a very significant possibility" that the future harm will ensue. Plaintiff's theory is, in essence, that he will engage in future criminal conduct—at some undetermined point in the future—and thereafter, will be represented by lawyers who will commit malpractice—because they are too "busy" and/or "underpaid" to do a competent job. These are unlawful assumptions. Plaintiff, for one thing, cannot presume his own future criminal conduct. A speculative fear that he will disobey the law and be arrested does not constitute a live "case or controversy"—even if accompanied by an allegation that it will keep happening. See City of Los Angeles v. Lyons, 461 U.S. 95 (1983). Nor may plaintiff presume future malpractice on the part of the public defenders. In United States v. Cronic, 466 U.S. 648, 658 (1984), the Supreme Court unanimously found reversible error when a circuit court took such an "inferential approach" to the ineffective assistance analysis. Public defender error, if it exists, must be found in trial court record.[2] Hypothetical future crime, followed by hypothetical malpractice, which is hypothetically ignored by the prosecutor and judges, does not support standing.

Third, even if plaintiff's allegations were proven,[3] it would not entitle him to the relief he seeks. The fact that a contract attorney errs does not create a constitutional claim against the municipality. Defense attorneys have free-standing ethical obligation to provide the best defense possible, regardless of who is paying or how busy they are. Thus, even if plaintiff were correct—and Sybrandy and Witt accepted a public defender contract that overburdened them—blame is not passed onto the Cities. Indeed, given the need for independent operations of the public defender, it would be problematic for the Cities to exercise more control over the public defenders than they already do. This is particularly true here, in a case where there are no objective indicia of malpractice. Plaintiffs will point to no reversals for ineffective assistance, nor any bar discipline. Prejudicial error is required under, Strickland v. Washington, 466 U.S. 668 (1984), not dissatisfaction based upon a subjective desire for "more meetings." If this were the constitutional standard—i.e., complaints about "the process"—there would be no stopping point. Every criminal defendant would complain as a means of verdict insurance, and no public defense agency would be left standing.

Fourth, basic equitable principles preclude the relief sought by plaintiff Moon. A party seeking equity must do equity. But the record does not support Moon. He repeatedly went fugitive—as he is at the time of this brief's filing—and when located, refused to comply with his promised plea conditions. As a matter of law and fairness, parties are not entitled to litigate for court benefits while simultaneously ignoring court authority. Thus, even if relief were available in this case, plaintiff would be foreclosed by his own unclean hands and the "fugitive from justice" doctrine.

[2] Cronic involved a novice real estate attorney who was assigned to defend a complex check kiting case on 25 days' notice. The Court of Appeals presumed ineffective assistance, given the limited time for preparation and experience. The Supreme Court rejected the presumption in favor of a required showing in the record.

[3] The Cities view plaintiff's allegations as demonstrably untrue. But, as discussed in this motion, dismissal of this case does not necessarily turn on veracity.

This lawsuit should be dismissed in its entirety.

II. FACTUAL BACKGROUND

A. Moon Is Arrested And Charged Following A Few Months Of Ongoing Criminal Conduct

Moon's saga with Mount Vernon began on August 29, 2008, when he confronted his girlfriend while she was in the shower, and assaulted her. Declaration of Andrew Cooley ("Cooley Decl.") at 78. She was able to get out of the house and call the police from a payphone. Id. Moon in turn fled, so no custodial arrest was made. Id. Following an investigation, a summons was issued for Moon's arrest. Id. at 77.

A few months later, on November 24, while at large, Moon was arrested for possession of drug paraphernalia. Id. at 61.

Then, again, on January 24, 2009, Moon was arrested for possession of dangerous weapons. Id. at 40.

B. Moon Resolves All Of His Pending Charges With A Free And Voluntary Guilty Plea

On August 8, 2009, Moon entered an official Plea of Guilt. Id. at 72. He pled to the crime of possession of a dangerous weapon (January 24, 2009), the crime of possession of drug paraphernalia (November 24, 2008), and the crime of intimidating a reporter of domestic violence (August 29, 2008). See id.

Significantly, the endorsed Statement of Plea was consistent with the form set forth in Criminal Rules for Court of Limited Jurisdiction (CrRLJ) 4.2. Moon made the following representations—under penalty of perjury—on the record:

- I Have Been Informed and Fully Understand that… I have the right to representation by a lawyer and that if I cannot afford to pay for a lawyer, one will be provided at no expense to me.

- I Understand That I Have the Following Important Rights, and I Give Them All Up by Pleading Guilty… [including][4] the right to appeal a finding of guilt
- I make this plea freely and voluntarily
- No one has threatened harm of any kind to me or to any other person to cause me to make this plea.
- No person has made promises of any kind to cause me to enter this plea except as set forth in this statement.

Id. at 71; see also CrCLJ 4.2.

Moon acknowledged the above rights, and attested that he understood that he was giving them up with his plea. This was all on the record. Moon also certified the following:

> My lawyer has explained to me, and we have fully discussed, all of the above paragraphs. I understand them all. I have been given a copy of this "Statement of Defendant on Plea of Guilty." I have no further questions to ask the judge.

Id. at 75.

Moon's various representations were relied upon by the Mount Vernon Municipal Court Judge, who made the following finding of fact:

> I find the defendant's plea of guilty to be knowingly, intelligently, and voluntarily made. Defendant understands the charges and the consequences of the plea. There is a factual basis for the plea. The defendant is guilty as charged.

Id. With that, Moon obtained the benefit of his plea agreement. He did not stand for trial, and obtained a sentence far below what he would have otherwise risked had the prosecution gone forward.

[4] Other rights specifically foregone include (1) the right to a speedy and public trial by an impartial jury in the county where the crime is alleged to have been committed; (2) the right to remain silent before and during trial, and the right to refuse to testify against myself; (3) the right at trial to hear and question the witnesses who testify against me; (4) the right at trial to testify and to have witnesses testify for me. These witnesses can be made to appear at no expense to me; and (5) I am presumed innocent unless the charge is proven beyond a reasonable doubt or I enter a plea of guilty.

C. Moon Takes A Diametrically Opposite Position In The Present Case, Attempting To Abandon His Sworn Statements To The Municipal Court

By way of brief interlude from Moon's story, it is interesting to note that he is now making wildly divergent representations to this Court. In his civil complaint, Moon alleges that he was forced to waive defenses, surrender valuable rights and coerced to plead guilty without any benefit. See Complaint ¶ 142-151. He elaborated in discovery:

> Basically any decision I have had to make has been without counsel in each case that I was represented by Mr. Witt, including but not limited to cases discussed above. For example, I have had to decide whether to plead guilty or not guilty without advice from counsel as to the benefits and risks of doing so. Mr. Witt never provided me with any advice other than to plead guilty. Mr. Witt did not discuss my rights with me.

Cooley Decl. at 97. (Resp. to Interrogatory No. 7).

He goes on:

> Basically, I waived any rights that I may have had without consultation or advice. Mr. Witt would not listen to me, he would not investigate my case, and he would not take the time to explain my rights to me. For example, I have had to waive my rights to a speedy trial and to have a jury trial without proper consultation or advice.

Id. at 99.

It is difficult to square these allegations with his earlier certification, relied upon by the municipal court: "My lawyer has explained to me, and we have fully discussed, all of the above paragraphs. I understand them all. I have been given a copy of this 'Statement of Defendant on Plea of Guilty.' I have no further questions to ask the judge."

D. Moon In Unable Or Unwilling To Abide By The Conditions Of His Plea

It took about six months for Moon to violate his plea agreement. The plea, among other things, required him to participate in an anti-domestic violence training program. By April 6, 2010, it was discovered that he had failed to follow through and violated his sentence. Id. at 68.

The court issued a commitment order, sentencing Moon to 60 days in jail on July 20, 2010. Id. at 67. Then, a few months later, the court permitted him to complete the 60 days on a work crew. Moon violated the terms of the work crew within about 20 days.

On March 7, 2011, public defender Witt withdrew as Moon's lawyer. Id. at 132.[5] A bench warrant was issued on April 20, 2011, (Id. at 132) and served May 3, 2011 (Id. at 132).

E. Moon Requests, And Is Appointed, Substitute Counsel

On April 23, 2011 Moon was investigated and charged with domestic violence. Id. at 29. He had fled the scene and was not arrested. Id. On May 23 Moon is arrested (Id. at 5) and the same day Public Defender Witt filed a Notice of Appearance. Id. at 25. Three weeks later, Attorney Marshall filed a Notice of Appearance. Id. at 20. Moon, through civil counsel, requested a new attorney.

Glen Hoff was substituted without issue. Id. pp. 134-35.

F. Moon Remains On Fugitive Status As Of The Date Of This Filing

Moon has an outstanding felony warrant from Skagit County. Id. at 172. He went fugitive on the April 23rd charge, and has a warrant in the Mount Vernon Municipal Court. Id. at 173. He also has a warrant for his arrest issued by the Bellingham Municipal Court. Id. at. 174.

III. LEGAL STANDARD

specific facts showing there is a genuine issue for trial." Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith RadioCorp., 475 U.S. 574, 586-87 (1986). An order of dismissal is properly entered when, as here, a lawsuit is not supported with credible evidence and argument. See Devereaux v. Abbey, 263 F.3d 1070, 1082 (9th Cir. 2001) (plaintiff's failure to marshal facts and argument resulted in summary judgment).

It is expected that plaintiff will hide behind his vague, but broadly-worded, "allegations"—and request more time for boundless discovery. This is not a legally tenable response, nor is it fair to the defendants. Particularly in the class action context, courts are sensitive to the "potentially enormous expense of discovery." See Bell Atlantic Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 557-59 (2007) (noting the likelihood of "largely groundless claim[s]… tak[ing] up the time of a number of other people, with the right to do so representing an in terrorem increment of the settlement value."). Deficiencies must therefore be "exposed at the point of minimum expenditure of time and money by the parties and the court." Id. at 558.[6]

As discussed below, Moon's claims fall short. Both binding authority and the undisputed record compel early dismissal—without the necessity of "enormous expenses."

IV. AUTHORITY

The plaintiff is requesting an injunction and a declaratory judgment, both of which involve standards that he cannot meet. A plaintiff seeking an injunction must demonstrate the following: (1) irreparable injury; (2) inadequate remedies at law; (3) the balance of hardships tilts in his or her favor; and (4) the public interest would not be disserved. See, e.g., eBay Inc. v. MercExchange, L.L.C., 547 U.S. 388 (2006) (citing Weinberger v. Romero-Barcelo, 456 U. S. 305, 311–313 (1982)). The Declaratory Judgment Act ("DJA"), similarly, allows the Court to prospectively declare the rights of interested party, so long as there is an "actual controversy." 28 U.S.C. § 2201(a); Armstrong v. Davis, 275

[6] This language is taken from a case involving Rule 12(b)(6), to be sure. But the underlying rationale is equally applicable in the summary judgment context. See Mutual Fund Investors, Inc. v. Putnam Management Co., 553 F.2d 620 (9th Cir. 1977) (when the legal or factual record foreclose the plaintiff's legal theories, summary judgment is proper and should be granted).

F.3d 849, 860-61 (9th Cir.2001) (repetition of the violation must be "realistically threatened).[7]

As outlined below, both theories fail. Not only is there no showing of likely harm or a real controversy, there is no wrongdoing whatsoever.

A. The Court Should Dismiss This Case Because Plaintiffs Have Adequate—And Ongoing—Remedies At Law

Moon is asking the Court to impose relief that he already has access to. Injunctive and declaratory relief are, quite logically, unavailable when unnecessary. Or, in the nomenclature, equitable relief should not awarded when there is an "adequate remedy at law." This is plainly so, here. Plaintiff has mandatory remedies and safeguards all the way through the criminal process—some of which he has already successfully exercised.

The claims should be dismissed on this basis alone.

1. Criminal Defendants Can Always Request A Substitution Of Counsel—As Illustrated By All Of The Named Plaintiffs Doing So

"An injunction is frequently termed 'the strong arm of equity'" and "should not be lightly indulged in, but should be used sparingly and only in a clear and plain case." 42 Am.Jur.2d INJUNCTIONS § 2, at 728 (1969) (emphasis added); see also Weinberger v. Romero-Barcelo, 456 U.S. 305 (1982) (extraordinary exercise of the court's equitable powers). Accordingly, a party seeking a federal injunction must demonstrate that it does not have an adequate remedy at law." Northern California Power Agency v. Grace Geothermal Corp., 469 U.S. 1306 (1984) (emphasis added); Wright & Miller, FEDERAL PRACTICE AND PROCEDURE § 2942 (2010) ("[T]he main prerequisite to obtaining injunctive relief is a finding that plaintiff is being threatened by some injury for which he has no adequate legal remedy."). The same is true of declaratory actions, which require an "actual controversy"—not a hypothetical one arising if multiple safeguards theoretically and [7] While the DJA empowers a court to grant such relief, it does not compel a court to hear a declaratory judgment action. Id.; Wilton v. Seven Falls Co., 515 U.S. 277, 287 (1995) (characterizing the DJA as "confer[ing] discretion on the courts rather than an absolute right upon the litigant.").

inexplicably fail. See 28 U.S.C. § 2201(a).

Applied here, plaintiff has not only one "adequate remedy," but a series of them. The first is a simple request for conflict counsel. The Cities' public defense contract with Sybrandy and Witt explicitly provides for this. If they are not up to the task—for any reason—the defendant may raise issue during proceedings. And this certainly occurs from time to time during arraignment, status hearings, and/or before acceptance of a plea. If there are colorable grounds, the judge will order a new attorney to appear on behalf of the defendant.[8] There is no showing or evidence that this, while simple, is an inadequate remedy.

Certainly, plaintiff Moon cannot make that argument, given that he successfully exercised this remedy. In June, Moon objected to his representation by Public Defender Witt. A different attorney was appointed to represent him through the remainder of his criminal proceedings. The other plaintiffs did the same thing.[9] The prosecutors did not object to the substitutions, nor did their public defender or the judge. All of the requests were summarily granted.

Even assuming for the sake of argument that Sybrandy and Witt could not adequately represent plaintiff, the problem would not be without a remedy. Upon request, plaintiff can—and did—immediately obtain a new attorney for the remainder of his case. This, as a matter of law and practicality, forecloses the need for the "extraordinary relief" of an injunction. See Munaf v. Green, 553 U.S. 674, 689-90 (2008) (noting that an injunction is an "extraordinary and drastic remedy" that "is never awarded as of right") (internal marks omitted); Sampson v. Murray, 415 U.S. 61, 90 (1974) ("The possibility that adequate compensatory or other corrective relief will be available at a later date, in the ordinary course of litigation, weighs heavily against a claim of irreparable harm.").

[8] Plaintiffs may argue that, as lay people, they "cannot know" when their attorney is incompetent. Such an argument is belied by the nature of their claims. See, e.g., Complaint ¶ 59-81 (various complaints related to timeliness and availability); ¶ 115-122 (Wilbur); ¶ 136-138 (Moon); ¶ 153-160 (Montague).

[9] The Cities believe that this was largely posturing for their civil case. But irrespective of their motives, all three of the plaintiffs illustrated the ease and effectiveness of their existing remedy at law.

2. When A Court Fails To Conduct A Searching Inquiry Following A Request For Substitution, It Constitutes Reversible Error

Plaintiff, in turn, may argue that the sound discretion of a municipal court judge—and past experience—is not enough. What if, for example, the criminal court judges arbitrarily deny substitution, or refuse to even engage in the inquiry? The answer is not difficult: the judges are required to closely evaluate substitution—under pain of reversal.

In Brown v. Craven, 424 F.2d 1166 (9th Cir. 1970), a criminal defendant had become embroiled in a conflict with his attorney prior to trial, and requested that the court appoint him a new one. Id. at 1170. The state trial court summarily denied the request. Id. On appeal, the Ninth Circuit held that this violated the Sixth Amendment. Id. The trial court must take the time to "conduct such necessary inquiry as might have eased [the defendant]'s dissatisfaction, distrust, and concern." Id.; see also United States v. D'Amore, 56 F.3d 1202, 1204 (9th Cir.1995) ("Absent such a compelling purpose… it is a violation of the Sixth Amendment to deny a motion to substitute counsel and an error that must be reversed, regardless of whether prejudice results.").[10]

Thus, plaintiff is protected by an existing remedy—substitution of counsel—which, itself, is safeguarded by decades of precedent. Trial court judges are, by law, required to undertake a serious inquiry into the merits of a substitution request. When they do not—even if the request is specious—it is reversible error.

3. Prejudicial Error Can Also Be Remedied On Appeal

But plaintiff has more remedies still. Like any criminal defendant, Moon would be entitled to reversal on appeal if his case were mishandled by trial counsel. Under Strickland v. Washington, 466 U.S. 668 (1984), a defendant is entitled to a reversal if he or she can show that counsel's performance was deficient and prejudicial. Id. at 687.

This applies to errors at all phases of the criminal proceedings, including the investigation, advice, plea agreements, trial practice, and sentencing. See, e.g., Moore v. Czerniak, 574 F.3d 1092 (9th Cir. 2009) (guilty plea following inadequate investigation), cert. granted, 130 S.Ct. 1882 (2010); Tovar Mendoza v. Hatch, 620 F.3d 1261 (10th Cir. 2010) (failure to adequately advise defendant of sentencing consequences following guilty plea); Bauder v. Dept. of Corrections, 619 F.3d 1272 (11th Cir. 2010) (failure to advise a defendant of exposure to sexually violent predator proceedings); Satterlee v. Wolfenbarger, 453 F.3d 362 (6th Cir. 2006) (failure to advise defendant of plea offer). This is commonly done in a post-trial hearing, avoiding even the necessity of an appeal.

Again, the suggestion that there is "no adequate remedy at law" could not be further from the truth; indeed, it is belied by an entire body of case law. The multiplicity of remedies that inhere the criminal process are incompatible with the "extraordinary and drastic remedy" of an injunction, Munaf v. Green, 553 U.S. 674, 689-90 (2008), and declaratory judgment, Armstrong v. Davis, 275 F.3d 849, 860-61 (9th Cir.2001) (must be "realistically threatened" by a repetition of purported violation); Hodgers-Durgin v. De La Vina, 199 F.3d 1037, 1044 (9th Cir.1999) ("contingent future events that may not occur as anticipated or indeed may not occur at all" do not support prospective relief).[11]

B. Plaintiffs Lack Standing To Pursue The "Extraordinary Relief" They Seek

Even assuming that plaintiff has no adequate remedy at law, he will still lack standing under Article III to pursue this lawsuit. Plaintiff must make an "individualized showing that there is a very significant possibility that future harm will ensue" to establish standing, Lee v. Oregon, 107 F.3d 1382, 1388-89 (9th Cir.1997), which is an indispensable part of the case, and must be established by evidence appropriate for every stage of the litigation. See Lujan v. Defenders of Wildlife, 504 U.S. 555, 561 (1992).

The same is true in class action lawsuits. See O'Shea v. Littleton, 414 U.S. 488, 494

[11] The Cities would also note that plaintiffs have an additional remedy in the form of a malpractice lawsuit. Assuming that they could make the necessary showing, they would be entitled to monetary damages associated with their public defender's breach of the standard of care. See Hipple v. McFadden, No. 39802-8-II (2011) (legal malpractice claim against two attorneys from the Pierce County Department of Assigned Counsel).

(1974); Sierra Club v. Morton, 405 U.S. 727 (1972). The standing analysis precedes any determination under Rule 23. See German v. Federal Loan Home Mortgage Corp., 885 F. Supp. 537, 547 (S.D.N.Y. 1995); Griffin v. Dugger, 823 F.2d 1476, 1482 (11th Cir. 1987); see also Brown v. Sibley, 650 F.2d 760, 771 (5th Cir. 1981). The Court assesses standing "based upon the standing of the named plaintiff, not upon the standing of unidentified class members." Adair v. Sorenson, 134 F.R.D. 13, 16 (D Mass. 1991), citing Warth v. Seldin, 422 U.S. 490, 502 (1975) (emphasis added).

In hopes of making this showing, Moon will engage in the following reasoning fiction: first, he will engage in future criminal conduct; second, he will be caught and arrested; third, he will remain indigent and be appointed a public defender; fourth, that public defender will be Sybrandy or Witt, and any attempt to substitute counsel will be unlawfully rejected; and fifth, Sybrandy and Witt will be too "busy" or "financially motivated" to comply with their legal and ethical obligations—leading to prejudicial harm.

The problems with this chain of hypotheticals, while perhaps self-evident, are explored below.

1. The Court Does Not Presume That Individuals Will Engage In Future Criminality

In City of Los Angeles v. Lyons, 461 U.S. 95 (1983), the plaintiff was stopped for a traffic infraction, and, without provocation, put in a chokehold. He sought declaratory relief and an injunction barring chokeholds under those circumstances. Id. at 98. The Supreme Court reversed, concluding that Lyons had failed to demonstrate a live case or controversy that would justify equitable relief. Applying the established rule that "past exposure to illegal conduct does not in itself show a present case or controversy regarding injunctive relief," id. at 102, the Lyons court reasoned:

> Lyons' standing to seek the injunction requested depended on whether he was likely to suffer future injury from the use of the chokeholds by police officers. That Lyons may have been illegally choked by the police on October 6, 1976… does nothing to establish a real and immediate threat that he would again be stopped for a traffic violation, or for any other offense, by

Lyons relied, in part, on O'Shea v. Littleton, 414 U. S. 488 (1974). O'Shea was a class action in which the plaintiffs claimed they were subjected to discriminatory enforcement of the criminal law.[12] The lower courts endorsed the cause of action. But the Supreme Court reversed and dismissed, for a lack of standing. Id. at 493. In doing so, it pointed out that the prospect of future injury rested entirely "on the likelihood that [plaintiffs] will again be arrested for and charged with violations of the criminal law and will again be subjected to bond proceedings, trial, or sentencing before petitioners." Id. Accordingly, the most that could be said for standing was that "if [plaintiffs] proceed to violate an unchallenged law and if they are charged, held to answer, and tried in any proceedings before petitioners, they will be subjected to the discriminatory practices..." Id. at 497. This does not pass muster under Article III of the constitution:

> Of course, past wrongs are evidence bearing on whether there is a real and immediate threat of repeated injury. But here the prospect of future injury rests on the likelihood that respondents will again be arrested for and charged with violations of the criminal law and will again be subjected to bond proceedings, trial, or sentencing before petitioners. … If the statutes that might possibly be enforced against respondents are valid laws, and if charges under these statutes are not improvidently made or pressed, the question becomes whether any perceived threat to respondents is sufficiently real and immediate to show an existing controversy simply because they anticipate violating lawful criminal statutes and being tried for their offenses, in which event they may appear before petitioners and, if they do, will be affected by the allegedly illegal conduct charged. Apparently, the proposition is that if respondents proceed to violate an unchallenged law and if they are charged, held to answer, and tried in any proceedings before petitioners, they will be subjected to the discriminatory practices that petitioners are alleged to have followed. But it seems to us that attempting to anticipate whether and when these respondents will be charged with crime and will be made to appear before either petitioner takes us into the area of speculation and conjecture.

Id. at 497-98.

As here, the plaintiff representatives had no constitutional right to violate the law in [12] They alleged, among other things, that they were subject to disparate sentencing by the county magistrate.

the future, nor any stated intention to continue doing so. Accordingly, the threat of injury arising out of such a course of conduct is too remote to satisfy the case-or-controversy requirement. See id.

Moon is, in essence, asking this Court to overrule Lyons and O'Shea. No different than those plaintiffs, the only likelihood of future injury rests upon future violation of valid laws. Future illegal conduct does not confer standing. The Court can end its analysis there.

2. The Court Does Not Presume That Licensed Attorneys Will Engage In Malpractice Barring An Extraordinary Showing, Grounded In The Trial Court Record

Setting aside the assumption of future lawlessness, the second problem with plaintiff's standing is that it presupposes future malpractice. Licensed, bar-certified attorneys are presumed competent to do their job. "Attorneys are trained in the law and equipped with the tools to interpret and apply legal principles, understand constitutional limits, and exercise legal judgment." Connick v. Thompson, ___ U.S. ___, 131 S.Ct. 1350, 1369 (2011). The lawyer's training "is what differentiates attorneys from average public employees." Id. And public defenders are no different. Absent some showing to the contrary, they are presumptively capable of providing the "guiding hand" that the defendant needs. See, e.g., Michel v. Louisiana, 350 U.S. 91, 100-101 (1955).

In United States v. Cronic, 466 U.S. 648 (1984), a young real estate attorney was appointed to represent a criminal defendant in a complex financial felony trial. Though the government had taken over four years to investigate the case, the new attorney was afforded a mere 25 days. This trial was also the young attorney's first. The jury convicted. On appeal, the Tenth Circuit reversed, concluding that the defendant did not have adequate assistance of counsel under the Sixth Amendment. Id. Significantly, the Court of Appeals did not point to any specific error in the trial court record, but instead, reasoned that no such showing was necessary when "the circumstances" hamper a given lawyers preparation of a defendant's case." Id.

The United States Supreme Court granted certiorari and unanimously reversed. In rejecting the Tenth Circuit's analysis, it framed the issue:

> While the Court of Appeals purported to apply a standard of reasonable competence, it did not indicate that there had been an actual breakdown of the adversarial process during the trial of this case. Instead it concluded that the circumstances surrounding the representation of respondent mandated an inference that counsel was unable to discharge his duties.
> In our evaluation of that conclusion, we begin by recognizing that the right to the effective assistance of counsel is recognized not for its own sake, but because of the effect it has on the ability of the accused to receive a fair trial. Absent some effect of challenged conduct on the reliability of the trial process, the Sixth Amendment guarantee is generally not implicated. Moreover, because we presume that the lawyer is competent to provide the guiding hand that the defendant needs, the burden rests on the accused to demonstrate a constitutional violation.

Id. at 657-58 (internal citations omitted) (emphasis added). From there, it rejected the Tenth Circuit's "inferential analysis," noting its deficiencies.[13]

Nonetheless, plaintiffs would urge this Court to re-adopt the now-defunct Tenth Circuit "inferential analysis" because Sybrandy or Witt may be "busy" and/or "underpaid." They theorize that these "circumstances" necessarily beget ineffective assistance of counsel. Cronic and Connick squarely reject this. Further, the "circumstances" complained of are equally compatible with efficient, experienced attorneys who did not enter into criminal defense entirely for money. That is why courts do not "infer" prejudicial error; they find it in the record.[14] This is consistent with the well settled principle that the Sixth Amendment focuses on prejudicial violations; it "does not exist for its own sake." Id. at 657-58 (citing United States v. Valenzuela-Bernal, 458 U. S. 858, 867-869 (1982)).

For purposes of granting prospective relief, the Court should not—and cannot—presume future attorney malpractice. This is particularly true here, where there is no evidence of any error prejudicing plaintiff Moon's case.

[13] The length of investigations, for example, need not have parity. The burden of searching for admissible evidence to support a conviction beyond a reasonable doubt may be different than the time needed to rebut the government's case. Id. at 663. Similarly, the fact that the public defender was a young real estate attorney cuts both ways. Younger attorneys can be competent, too, and a real estate background tended to be more applicable than experience trying "armed robbery" cases. Id. at 665.

[14] Cronic noted a few extraordinary circumstances where prejudice is presumed—such as "the complete denial of counsel" or "appointment of an out-of-state attorney on the morning of a capital case." Id. at 659-60. These do not apply to our case.

3. Future Harm Will Only Come To Fruition In The Event That Everybody Involved In The Criminal Process Abdicates Their Responsibilities

The "very significant possibility that future harm" alleged in plaintiffs' complaint also presupposes that every attorney in the courtroom will disregard their duties, in unison. The rules certainly require that the public defender provide competent assistance. But they also require the prosecutor to safeguard the system, and the judge to oversee the process. All of these offices have independent obligations.

Of course, the first duty rests with the public defenders. Consistent with Cronic and Connick, this Court—like the Cities—may presume that the public defenders will act diligently and competently. The Washington Rules of Professional Conduct in fact require them to decline representation they become incapable of doing a competent job. See RPC 1.16(a)(1) ("the representation will result in violation of the Rules of Professional Conduct or other law."). The ABA's Criminal Justice Standards echo this principle:

> (e) Defense counsel should not carry a workload that, by reason of its excessive size, interferes with the rendering of quality representation, endangers the client's interest in the speedy disposition of charges, or may lead to the breach of professional obligations.

ABA Criminal Justice Standards, Defense Function 4-1.3

In Mount Vernon v. Weston, 68 Wn. App. 411, 844 P.2d 438 (1992), defense counsel requested to withdraw, citing a lack of "time, expertise, and resources." Id. at 413-14. The trial court's refusal was reversed as an abuse of discretion.[15] Likewise in State v. Jones, 2008-Ohio-6994 (11th Dist. December 31, 2008), a public defender was assigned a matter on short notice, and could not adequately prepare. He requested a continuance, which was denied. Then, because he believed that it would be inadequate assistance to proceed to trial, he refused to go forward. The trial court held him in contempt. The Ohio Supreme Court reversed, observing that "[i]t would have been "unethical" for appellant to proceed with trial as any attempt at rendering effective assistance would have been futile. Appellant properly refused to put his client's constitutional rights at risk by proceeding to trial unprepared." Jones, ¶ 28-29.

Sybrandy and Witt, too, would be obligated to decline a representation that they could not adequately handle. If—as plaintiffs suggest—they are too "busy" to provide competent assistance, they would seek a continuance or withdrawal. The Cities, for their part, may rely upon licensed attorneys to ethically do their job.

Similarly, the prosecutors in Mount Vernon and Burlington also have a special obligation to protect the rights of the accused. They are memorialized in the Rules of Professional Responsibility:

> The prosecutor in a criminal case shall:
> (a) refrain from prosecuting a charge that the prosecutor knows is not supported by probable cause;
> (b) make reasonable efforts to assure that the accused has been advised of the right to, and the procedure for obtaining, counsel and has been given reasonable opportunity to obtain counsel;
> (c) not seek to obtain from an unrepresented accused a waiver of important pretrial rights, such as the right to a preliminary hearing;

RPC 3.8; see also Standard 3-1.2(c), American Bar Association Standards for Criminal Justice (3d ed. 1993) ("The duty of the prosecutor is to seek justice, not merely to convict.").

Washington is no different. In the context of misconduct, the Supreme Court has repeatedly rejected the notion that the prosecutor is nothing more than a partisan:

> Language which might be permitted to counsel in summing up a civil action cannot with propriety be used by a public prosecutor, who is a quasi-judicial officer, representing the People of the state, and presumed to act impartially in the interest only of justice. If he lays aside the impartiality that should characterize his official action to become a heated partisan, and > by vituperation of the prisoner and appeals to prejudice seeks to procure a conviction at all hazards, he ceases to properly represent the public interest, which demands no victim, and asks no conviction through the aid of passion, sympathy or resentment.

State v. Case, 49 Wn.2d 66, 70-71, 298 P.2d 500 (1956) (citing People v. Fielding, 158 N.Y. 542, 547, 53 N.E. 497 (1899)) (emphasis added); see also State v. Montgomery, 56 Wn. 443, 447-48, 105 P. 1035 (1909) ("devotion to duty" is not measured by the victims).

Thus, both the case law and the Rules of Professional Conduct dictate the same result: that the prosecutor safeguards the constitutional rights of the accused. The prosecutors—by virtue of their independent duties—are not permitted to mindlessly obtain guilty pleas and verdicts which are the product of Sixth Amendment violations.[16] If indigent defenders were systematically being railroaded by incompetent lawyers, the prosecutor would be duty-bound to halt the process.

Lastly, the judge also has an independent duty to the accused. Apart from the well-established obligations to address the concerns of the accused, supra, the judge is required to raise issue if a lawyer's conduct "raises a substantial question regarding… honesty, trustworthiness, or fitness." CJC 2.15(B). And more importantly, under the State Constitution, they must swear to "support the Constitution of the United States and the Constitution of the State of Washington." WA Const. Art. IV, Sect. 28. To the extent that constitutional violations are "rampant," they are empowered—and required—to fix the process.

In summary, for a constitutional violation to occur, the entire system has to break down at the same time. All of the attorneys involved, as well as the judge, must all disregard the constitutional rights of the defendant, in unison. Conversely, the Sixth Amendment remains safeguarded so long as at least one individual complies with his or her duties. It follows that plaintiff will only be subject to a constitutional deprivation if:

(1) he begins committing crime at some point in the future, which is an impermissible assumption under Lyons and O'Shea;

(2) Sybrandy or Witt are assigned to represent him, and do so unethically and incompetently, which is an impermissible assumption under Connick and Cronic;

(3) plaintiff requests a substitution of counsel, which is unlawfully ignored by the court;

(4) the prosecutors and judge turn a blind eye;

(4) the plaintiffs suffer prejudicial error; and

(5) the appellate courts ignore their duty to fix it under both Brown v. Craven, 424 F.2d 1166 (9th Cir. 1970), and Strickland v. Washington, 466 U.S. 668 (1984).

This is, to put it mildly, a very theoretical and speculative chain of events.

Prospective relief requires imminent future harm. This is not the case when, as here, it rests upon "contingent future events that may not occur as anticipated or indeed may not occur at all." Hodgers-Durgin v. De La Vina, 199 F.3d 1037, 1044 (9th Cir.1999); Armstrong v. Davis, 275 F.3d 849, 860-61 (9th Cir.2001) (must be "realistically threatened" by a repetition of purported violation) (emphasis added).

Plaintiffs' claims for injunction and declaratory relief fail.

4. This Case Does Not Involve "Exceptional Circumstances" Warranting The "Capable Of Repetition But Evading Review" Doctrine

It is anticipated that the plaintiff will point to the capable of repetition, but evading review doctrine, to prop up a standing argument. But "the capable-of-repetition doctrine applies only in exceptional situations." City of Los Angeles v. Lyons, 461 U.S. 95, 109 (1983). Our case does not qualify.

First, this is not a case involving Sixth Amendment violations that are continually mooted. As the name of the doctrine implies, violations must actually be "capable of repetition," which infers that violations actually happen from time to time. But they do not. Plaintiff Moon's rights have never been violated. The sole adjudication involved a certification, on the record, that it was knowing and intelligent—and there is no evidence that it was a "bad deal," in any event. In fact, there is no evidence of anybody's rights ever having been violated by prejudicial error.[17] Unless the Court stands ready to overrule Strickland—and declare that process-based complaints, made after the fact, are now a species of constitutional violation—there is no Sixth Amendment violation by definition.

Second, the capable-of-repetition doctrine places a duty of diligence on the plaintiff. The Circuit Courts are uniform in this regard: a litigant who could have, but did not, attempt to stay a given action may not later claim his case evaded review, barring exceptional circumstances. Armstrong v. FAA, 515 F.3d 1294, 1297 (D.C. Cir. 2008) (collecting cases). If plaintiff Moon believed that his rights were being violated, he could have requested that his criminal case be stayed, sought an injunction, or at a minimum, objected to preserve some sort of error. See Minn. Humane Soc'y v. Clark, 184 F.3d 795, 797 (8th Cir. 1999) (applying the rule to numerous avenues of preliminary relief, including appeals). He did none of this. He instead rejected the court's authority entirely, and went fugitive. It is unclear how this is sufficiently "extraordinary" to create fictional standing.

In short, this case is not Roe v. Wade. It is not continually mooted by a nine month gestational period. This is a case where plaintiffs are fully capable of addressing their own Sixth Amendment-based fears through a number of long-standing procedural mechanisms. To the extent raised, the "capable of repetition" doctrine may be safely set aside.

C. The Court Should Dismiss This Case Because Plaintiffs Would Not Be Entitled To The Relief They Seek, Even If All of Their Factual Allegations Were True

The Cities acknowledge that there are a small minority of cases—comprised almost exclusively of vacated[18] or un-appealed state trial court decisions[19]—in which a theory like this was permitted to go forward (on much stronger facts). Indeed, the only notable [17] Plaintiffs point to no reversals on appeal, nor any findings by any court or bar association.

[18] Luckey v. Harris, 860 F.2d 1012, 1017 (11th Cir. 1988), vacated, 976 F.2d 673 (11th Cir. 1992).
[19] See, e.g., Best v. Grant County, No. 4-2-00189 (Wash. Sup. Ct. 2005) (un-appealed summary judgment denial).

exception to the general rule disallowing this theory is the New York Court of Appeals' decision in Hurrell-Harring v. State of New York, 2010 NY Slip Op. 03798 (May 6, 2010), where it is not even clear that standing was even raised as an issue.[20]

Nonetheless, to the extent that the Court adopts the reasoning of these anomalous cases, the outcome does not change. Plaintiffs cannot establish "deliberate indifference," even if every single allegation in plaintiff's complaint was proven.

1. The Government Does Not Violate The Constitution When A Licensed Criminal Defense Attorney Errs

If this lawsuit seems somewhat counterintuitive, that is because it is. It presumes that two attorneys with no record of bar discipline or reversal will commit rampant malpractice in the future—and therefore the Cities should be subject to judicial management. The law does not work this way.

In Polk County v. Dodson, 454 U.S. 312 (1981), the Supreme Court set out the relationship between the public defender and the government. It requires two primary things. First, the public defender's adherence to his or her responsibilities, irrespective of state influence. And second, independence from government influence. Case load and pay do not alter either of these principles:

> Because public defenders are paid by the State, it is argued that they are subject to supervision by persons with interests unrelated to those of indigent clients. Although the employment relationship is certainly a relevant factor, we find it insufficient to establish that a public defender acts under color of state law within the meaning of § 1983.
> First, a public defender is not amenable to administrative direction in the same sense as other employees of the State. Administrative and legislative decisions undoubtedly influence the way a public defender does his work. State decisions may determine the quality of his law library or the size of his caseload. But a defense lawyer is not, and by the nature of his [20] Additionally, this decision stands in sharp contrast to the majority of courts that have rejected such a theory. See, e.g., Platt v. State of Indiana, 663 N.E.2d 357, 363 (Ind. Ct. App. 1996) (dismissing the case because it "was not ripe for review because a violation of the right to counsel… will arise only after a defendant has shown he was prejudiced by an unfair trial"); Kennedy v. Carlson, 544 N.W.2d 1, 8 (Minn. 1996) (rejecting claim of prospective harm due to "underfunded" public defender because claims were too "speculative and hypothetical to support jurisdiction"); Machado v. Leahy, 17 Mass. L. Rep. 26 (Mass. Super. Cit. 2004) (disallowing class theory as too vague and raising separation of powers concerns).

> Second, and equally important, it is the constitutional obligation of the State to respect the professional independence of the public defenders whom it engages. This Court's decision in Gideon v. Wainwright, 372 U.S. 335 (1963), established the right of state criminal defendants to the guiding hand of counsel at every step in the proceedings against [them]. Implicit in the concept of a 'guiding hand' is the assumption that counsel will be free of state control. There can be no fair trial unless the accused receives the services of an effective and independent advocate.

Id. at 321-22 (internal citations omitted).

These principles were recently applied in the Western District by Judge McDonald. In Gausvik v. Perez, 239 F.Supp.2d 1047 (E.D.Wash. 2002), he addressed a nearly identical theory—supported by much more egregious facts—pursued against Chelan County, after the contracted public defenders mishandled the defense of a several sex abuse cases in Wenatchee. One of the exonerated defendants sued both the attorneys and the county, alleging, as here, that it "fail[ed] to supervise and monitor the public defender to ensure that the office was adequately funded and had adequate resources and that adequate and constitutionally mandated legal services [were] being provided." Id. at 1061.

The plaintiffs in Perez argued, as here, claimed that Chelan County failed to abide by RCW 10.101.030 and enact proper standards. They claimed that the public defender contract was awarded to the "lowest bidder," in a process that involved "no qualitative standards." They claimed that the public defender firm "was required to pay fees and costs for conflict attorneys from its lump contract sum—and the sex abuse cases "created a great risk of public defender lawyers failing to defend their clients" and leading to "financial motive to settle cases as quickly as possible." And the Perez plaintiffs also blamed the county for this systemic failure.[21] Id. at 1063-64.

Judge McDonald had no trouble rejecting the claims against the County. He reasoned that if the plaintiff did not receive effective assistance, it was because the public defenders, not Chelan County, erred. Attorneys have a free-standing ethical obligation to provide the best defense possible, regardless of who is paying, and how much is being paid. Thus, if the contract public defender was making decisions about a criminal representation "based on economic self-interest, that was a violation of his ethical obligation to their client." The blame could not be passed to Chelan County. See also Clay v. Friedman, 541 F. Supp. 500 (N.D. Ill. 1982) (rejecting constitutional theory against County Office of the Public Defender based on incompetent representation, excessive caseloads, and failure to monitor).

In ruling, Judge McDonald also rejected the notion that the public defenders were not adequately trained.

> [The public defender] is a law school graduate, a member in good standing of the state bar, and was hired for a deputy public defender position on the basis of his perceived abilities. Accordingly, the County's assignment of him to represent [the defendant] did not evince deliberate indifference to [the defendant's] right to effective assistance of counsel. The Sixth Amendment does not guarantee to [him], or any criminal defendant, the assistance of Perry Mason...

Id. at 1061.

A constitutional theory under § 1983 against the government involves an exceedingly high standard: "deliberate indifference." Id. Under Monell, the government entity is only liable when its policy or custom is the moving force behind a constitutional deprivation.[22] Miranda v. Clark County, 319 F.3d 465, 469-70 (9th Cir. 2003). In Miranda, the County implemented a "polygraph policy," which required minimal attention to defendants who failed a preliminary polygraph test. Id. at 469. The Ninth Circuit found, [21] Unlike our case, prejudice was actually established in Perez. There, unlike here, an innocent man went to jail as a consequence of a shoddy defense.

[22] A city violates the constitution when its "policy" amounts to a "deliberate indifference" to a defendant's constitutional rights, and that is the moving force behind the violation. City of Canton, 489 U.S. at 388-89.

on a Rule 12(b)(6) record, that this "deliberate pattern and policy of refusing to train lawyers for capital cases" and assigning the least experienced public defender to the woeful defendant who failed a lie detector test, was sufficient to state a claim for "deliberate indifference to constitutional rights." Id. at 471.

It is the Cities' belief that Sybrandy and Witt are effective attorneys who adequately represent their clients' interest. But even if they erred, there is nothing that the Cities did, or failed to do, that would make them "deliberately indifferent" (to prejudicial violations that appear nowhere in the record).

2. The Cities Were Not Deliberately Indifferent To The Sixth Amendment In Contracting For And Maintaining Public Defense Services

The public defender contract between the Cities and Sybrandy/Witt does not evidence "indifference." It is approximately 25 pages in length, contemplates case load limits and performance reporting (though this is not required), as well as conflicts, confidentiality, and necessary qualifications.[23] Indeed, the contract itself was the product of an intensive bid process.

There is no evidence that the contract was not followed, nor evidence that it is in any way deficient under any applicable standard.

3. This Court Is Not The Appropriate Forum To Establish New Norms And Standards For Washington Practitioners

Plaintiff's complaint places the cart before the horse. It is true that, from time to time, the Supreme Court may look to ABA promulgations as "helpful guides" in determining professional reasonableness under the Sixth Amendment. But the courts do not generate new standards by constitutional fiat—such as "caseload limits" or "practitioner percentages." This is precisely what the Supreme Court warned against in Nix v. Whiteside:

> When examining attorney conduct, a court must be careful not to narrow the wide range of conduct acceptable under the Sixth Amendment so restrictively as to constitutionalize particular standards of professional > conduct and thereby intrude into the state's proper authority to define and apply the standards of professional conduct applicable to those it admits to practice in its courts.

475 U.S. 157, 165 (1986). Yet many—if not, all—of plaintiffs' allegations are premised upon these still-unadopted standards.

Indeed, two years ago, the Supreme Court reversed the Sixth Circuit for going further than this. In Bobby v. Van Hook, 130 S. Ct. 13 (2009), the Sixth Circuit had found ineffective assistance when trial counsel failed to comply with contemporary standards in his investigation and presentation mitigating evidence. On review, the Supreme Court reiterated that the Strickland "standard is necessarily a general one." Id. at 16. Promulgated professional standards, such as ABA guidelines, may be "useful guides" insofar as they describe the prevailing norms during the representation. Id.[24] It was therefore error for the Sixth Circuit to rely on guidelines that post-dated the trial. The Supreme Court concluded by observing:

> While States are free to impose whatever specific rules they see fit to ensure that criminal defendants are well represented, we have held that the Federal Constitution imposes one general requirement: that counsel make objectively reasonable choices.

Id. at 17 (citing Roe v. Flores-Ortega, 528 U.S. 470, 479 (2000)).

The theory advanced by plaintiff here reaches much further than Van Hook ever did. There, the standards applied by the Sixth Circuit were actually promulgated at some point in time. Here, by contrast, case load limits and practitioner percentages are still hotly debated in the Washington Supreme Court committees. And there is no promulgated standard calling for a "soft demeanor" or "standing next to one's client" at given times.

The standard in this case is not "best practices." All organizations can theoretically be improved. Corporations can become more efficient; schools more effective; and coffee shops friendlier. Public defense is no different—it can always implement better training or hire more seasoned attorneys. But that is simply not the constitutional standard: "the Sixth [24] In Van Hook, as in many other cases, the Court was quick to note that such standards do not amount to "inexorable commands." Id. Nor are they constitutional requirements.

Amendment does not guarantee… any criminal defendant the assistance of Perry Mason." Miranda v. Clark County, 279 F.3d 1102 (9th Cir. 2002).

Plaintiffs, and their attorneys, are free to publicly advocate for any standard that they deem appropriate. This may include a sum-certain number of "communications" with the public defender, case load limits, or mandatory meetings in jail. If adopted after public process and input, these new standards may become a "useful guide," Van Hook, 130 S. Ct. at 16, and perhaps influence "prevailing norms" in future Sixth Amendment litigation. But this lawsuit is an end-run; plaintiffs are not entitled to sue municipalities, in hopes of "imposing" un-adopted standards and avoid the public process.

This Court should dismiss, and send the debate back to a public forum.

D. Basic Equitable Principles Preclude The Relief Sought By Plaintiff

As discussed above, there is no evidence that any individual has ever had his or her Sixth Amendment rights violated. There is no evidence that Sybrandy or Witt ever did anything that prejudiced anybody's defense. There is no evidence that the plaintiffs' prospective fear is grounded upon anything more than speculative, hypothetical events. And there is no evidence that the Cities were deliberately indifferent to anything. But even ignoring all of this, Moon is precluded from the relief they seek on equitable grounds.

1. Judicial Estoppel Precludes Plaintiff Moon's Claims

As discussed in the Factual Background portion of this brief, Moon explicitly endorsed the actions of the public defender in the context of his single adjudication. He certified, among other things:

- I Have Been Informed and Fully Understand that… I have the right to representation by a lawyer and that if I cannot afford to pay for a lawyer, one will be provided at no expense to me.

- I Understand That I Have the Following Important Rights, and I Give Them All Up by Pleading Guilty… [including][25] the right to appeal a finding of guilt

[25] Other rights specifically foregone include (1) the right to a speedy and public trial by an impartial jury in the county where the crime is alleged to have been committed; (2) the right to remain silent before and during

- I make this plea freely and voluntarily
- No one has threatened harm of any kind to me or to any other person to cause me to make this plea.
- No person has made promises of any kind to cause me to enter this plea except as set forth in this statement.
- My lawyer has explained to me, and we have fully discussed, all of the above paragraphs. I understand them all. I have been given a copy of this "Statement of Defendant on Plea of Guilty." I have no further questions to ask the judge.

See CrCLJ 4.2 (emphasis added).

Moon, like any other civil litigant, is not entitled to reject his prior own sworn statements—and now claim ignorance, involuntary compliance, and prejudice. These statements, in the municipal court, permitted him the fruits of a beneficial plea agreement. He cannot accept it, only to distance himself when tactically convenient in civil court. This doublespeak is precisely what judicial estoppel prevents.

Judicial estoppel disallows the use of inconsistent assertions that would otherwise permit a litigant to obtain an "unfair advantage," at the expense of the judiciary. Arizona v. Shamrock Foods Co., 729 F.2d 1208, 1215 (9th Cir.1984) (quoting Scarano v. Central R. Co. of New Jersey, 203 F.2d 510, 513 (3rd Cir.1953)). In essence it stops parties from playing "fast and loose with the courts" by asserting inconsistent positions. See e.g., id.; Edwards v. Aetna Life Ins. Co., 690 F.2d 595, 598-99 (6th Cir.1982). In determining whether to apply judicial estoppel, a court considers:

> (1) whether the party's later position is inconsistent with its initial position;
> (2) whether the party successfully persuaded the court to accept its earlier position; and
> (3) whether the party would derive an unfair advantage or impose an trial, and the right to refuse to testify against myself; (3) the right at trial to hear and question the witnesses who testify against me; (4) the right at trial to testify and to have witnesses testify for me. These witnesses can be made to appear at no expense to me; and (5) I am presumed innocent unless the charge is proven beyond a reasonable doubt or I enter a plea of guilty.

unfair detriment on opposing party if not stopped.

Hamilton v. State Farm Fire & Cas. Co., 270 F.3d 778, 782-83 (9th Cir. 2001) (citing New Hampshire v. Maine, 532 U.S. 742 (2001)).

The inconsistent positions that Moon will take, if allowed—which did culminate in benefits in the prior forum—cannot be accepted by this Court. His public defender's conduct, which was endorsed, concurred to, and accepted by the municipal court, is not subject to collateral attack in this forum.

2. Plaintiff Is Not Entitled To Seek Equitable Relief With Unclean Hands

The doctrine of "unclean hands" gives courts discretion to refuse aid to claimants who do not come with "clean hands." See Precision Instrument Mfg. v. Automotive Maintenance Mach. Co., 324 U.S. 806, 814 (1945). In effect, it "closes the doors of a court of equity to one tainted with the inequitableness or bad faith relative to the matter in which he seeks relief, however improper may have been the behavior of the defendant." Ellenburg v. Brockway, Inc., 763 F.2d 1091, 1097 (9th Cir. 1985). This merely requires that those seeking the court's protection act "fairly and without fraud or deceit as to the controversy in issue." Id. (citation omitted); see also Adler v. Federal Republic of Nigeria, 219 F.3d 869, 876-77 (9th Cir. 2000).

Moon is presently on fugitive status. In other words, he is currently rejecting the authority of the very court he proposed to "fix." And this does not even speak of his repeated violations of court orders, disregard for agreed conditions, and evasion of lawful warrants. For over 100 years, the Supreme Court has spoken to this very issue—in the "fugitive from justice doctrine"—when parties demand court resources, while simultaneously ignoring court authority. See Smith v. United States, 94 U.S. 97, 97 (1876) ("If we affirm the judgment, [the defendant] is not likely to appear to submit to his sentence. If we reverse it and order a new trial, he will appear or not, as he may consider most for his interest. Under such circumstances, we are not inclined to hear and decide what may prove to be only a moot case."); Allen v. Georgia, 166 U.S. 138, 141 (1897) ("[i]t is much more becoming to its dignity that the court should prescribe the conditions upon which an escaped convict should be permitted to appear and prosecute his writ, than that the latter should dictate the terms upon which he will consent to surrender himself to its custody"); Molinaro v. New Jersey, 396 U.S. 365, 366 (1970) (escape "disentitles the defendant to call upon the resources of the Court for determination of his claims").[26]

This Court, too, has no obligation to grant equitable relief to a man who has repeatedly and systematically rejected judicial authority. Indeed, he rejects it to this day—remaining a fugitive from justice. One who seeks equity must do equity. Moon has not, and as such, is not entitled to come before this Court demanding equity.

V. CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the Cities respectfully request that this Court endorse and enter their proposed order dismissing this case on summary judgment, a copy of which accompanies this memorandum.

[26] The fugitive from justice doctrine is typically applied as an appellate doctrine. But the underlying rationale is identical in this case. Parties are simply not allowed to have it both ways, seeking various benefits and resources from the court, while ignoring its burdens and authority.
